Summertime Sets the Scenes

SUMMERTIME sets many lovely scenes as backgrounds for the summer girl, or anyone else who takes these backgrounds into consideration when choosing her frocks. For most of us, practical clothes for this workaday world in which we find ourselves are as important at least as those that are decorative, and it happens that the gingham, chambray, percale and other dependable cottons that make our frocks for work have attractions equal to those that make the dresses of our leisure hours. Special designers plan these dresses on lines that prove as charming as any others.

But the business of living requires us to have frocks for play and leisure, and summer brings with it the crisp, diaphanous stuffs that belong to it alone. Organdie and net-lace have their day under the skies of summer, and she is wise who makes the most of it. These materials come in the most exquisite and flowered colors, and in white that looks as cool as snow; they are within the means of everyone and the easiest to make up neatly. The pretty, simple, yet shown in the picture, are best simply designed and very serviceable. The plain organdie at the left is shown in white but looks well in any color and especially so in the popular shades of blue and green.

Methodist missionary in Japan for 16 years, returned home today to his left to return to the island. Just so far as we heard of it, it was a dark cloud of trouble, trouble hanging in the air, and it was a challenge to fight. It was and is a challenge by our mission and by the Japan Methodist church to tell you that Japan does not want war but a square deal.

Dr. Smith suggested that race relation of the question might be the decisive limitation of all immigration and in requiring all who come to the United States to become truly naturalized, honest-to-goodness American citizens. Japanese are now forbidden naturalization.

The missionary intimated he opposed Japanese expansion in Manchuria and Siberia, a movement which has disturbed American thought. "Is it not right," he asked, "that Japan should find outlet for her surplus population in the vast open spaces of Manchuria and Siberia? What has Russia with her penal colonies and her tsarevitch ever done for Siberia anyway, and by what right does she hold it?"

Mary Pickford's former husband has married again. It must be pleasant to be known as the latest wife of the former husband of the new wife of another man.

It's always the way. Now that the world has been made safe for democracy there are no Democrats.

ABOUT YOUR BOARD.

How many things both just and unjust are attributed to custom—Terence

IN DAYS long, long gone by the head of a large and important family sat on a raised dais at meals, with members of his immediate family and specially honored guests. Others sat at a table on the floor of the room, the most important guests or relatives, sitting at the greatest distance from the host. Even in our colonial days it was customary to have a raised seat in the center of the room and the older and more important persons sat above the seat, while the host who sat at the head of the table, while those less important sat below that point. With such an arrangement it was possible to have almost the entire household—save for those who were serving the food—sit at the same time without embarrassment to anyone. Sometimes in these days, embarrassing questions come up concerning the placing of members of one's household at the dinner table. Should the housekeeper be seated with members of the family at dinner? writes a woman who is experienced.

Obviously it is not for the housekeeper to decide but for those who employ her, and if she feels that not to have meals with the family is an act of disrespect to her, why then for her own peace of mind she ought to find employment somewhere else. In the homes of those who employ many servants the housekeeper would not dream of eating with the family—on the contrary, her meals would be served in her own sitting room. Some governesses do not usually eat at the family table unless their charges do, and in large establishments children very often have their meals served in the day nursery. If they dine earlier than their fathers then customarily the governess does also. Usually school nurses employed in private homes have meals with the family, but sometimes it is customary for them to eat prior to the family and this becomes a matter of convenience as some members will be free to take the nurse's place at the patient's bedside while she is eating. On occasion nurses in uniform do not eat at the first table, but have their meals in the general dining room at the hours appointed for children and their nurses. Of course, some young women resent this, feeling themselves quite the social equals, possibly the superiors, of those who employ them, but if they have good sense, they realize that they are suffering no real indignity and that it is the truly professional spirit to accept conditions as they find them.
